The ninth technical meeting between Turkish and Greek military delegations in Brussels concluded Friday, according to the National Defense Ministry.

The meeting at NATO headquarters was to discuss establishing a de-confliction mechanism between the two countries amid disputes about maritime boundaries and related issues.

NATO said in October that such a mechanism is designed to reduce the risk of incidents and accidents in the Eastern Mediterranean. It includes the creation of a hotline between Turkey and Greece, to facilitate de-confliction at sea or in the air.
