Pyongyang blames US hostility as experts warn of return to vicious cycle of provocation and sanctions.

A meeting of the powerful politburo of North Koreas ruling party, presided over by leader Kim Jong Un, has said that it will consider resuming all temporarily suspended nuclear and intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) tests amid an ongoing effort to boost the countrys military against a hostile United States, state media reported.

The countrys Rodong Sinmun newspaper quoted politburo members saying they were looking to examine the issue on resuming all actions, which had been temporarily suspended, in an apparent reference to a self-imposed moratorium on the testing of nuclear weapons and ICBMs that began in 2017.
