Swedens debate over NATO membership moved into a higher gear on Friday with a meeting of the governing Social Democratic Partys leaders to discuss a potential application to join the military alliance.

The six-hour meeting in Stockholm of the partys governing body marked the start of what is expected to be a roughly four-week consultation period before the Social Democrats make a final decision, which is expected on or around May 24.

More in-person gatherings of the partys leadership are planned as well as online debates with local party members.
