British Prime Minister Boris Johnson has said he will step down. The embattled leader had faced a growing rebellion within his party over a series of scandals.

Johnson said the timetable for his departure will be announced next week, saying he has appointed new Cabinet while he remains as UK prime minister until a successor is chosen. The prime minister said he regrets not being able to convince party to support him, said herd instinct powerful.

He defiantly told legislators he had a colossal mandate from voters and intended to get on with the business of government.
