Flying drones into each others airspace violated an armistice that ended fighting in the 1950-1953 Korean War, UN says.

North Korea and South Korea violated the armistice that governs their shared border by sending drones into each others airspace in December, the US-led United Nations Command says.

Five North Korean drones crossed into the South on December 26, prompting South Koreas military to scramble fighter jets and helicopters as well as send surveillance aircraft into the North to photograph its military installations.
