Seven Greek police officers who served as heads of sensitive services have been removed in connection to the ongoing surveillance scandal.

According to the Greek media outlet Kathimerini, the seven persons, two lieutenant generals and five major generals, served in critical positions such as the Special Anti-Terrorist Unit and the Attica Security department, the Internal Affairs Service and the Police Intelligence Division.

Kathimerini named the seven officers, two of whom, Ilias Kossyvakis and Nikos Tsetsikas, were among the people most connected to the wiretapping scandal.
