Ruling Amanat Party ranks first with 53.46% of vote according to survey by Eurasian Integration Institute

Exit polls Sunday from Kazakhstan's early parliamentary and local council elections showed that six of the seven political parties running for office crossed the threshold needed to be admitted to the lower house of the legislature.

According to a survey conducted by the Eurasian Integration Institute covering 30,000 voters at 200 polling stations, including 124 in cities and 76 in villages, the Amanat Party ranked first with 53.46% of the vote. The Auyt People's Democratic Party came in second with 10.52%, and the Respublika Party, which participated in the elections for the first time, came in third with 8.9%.
