A Jakarta court has ruled that elections set for 2024 cannot take place until at least 2025, a decision that seems to go against the constitution.

Indonesias presidential and general elections have been thrown into jeopardy following a surprise ruling to delay voting by a court in Jakarta, prompting widespread condemnation of the shock, and seemingly unconstitutional, decision.

The Central Jakarta District Court ruled earlier this month that the elections □ scheduled to take place in February 2024 □ should be delayed for two and a half years, meaning that the earliest the elections could go ahead would be in 2025.
