Radio Free Europe (5 June 2023)

Irene Khan, UN special rapporteur on freedom of opinion and expression, expressed concerns over the rise in hate speech in Serbia following two mass-killing incidents in the Balkan nation. Serbia must take immediate and effective measures against hateful and divisive rhetoric in public discourse which fuels violence in society, a UN statement said. The shootings have traumatized the entire country. It is unconscionable to use this tragedy as yet another occasion to stir up hatred, demonizing and vilifying independent media, human rights defenders, political opponents, and others critical of the government.
