Prime Minister Kyriakos Mitsotakis reiterated on Wednesday that Greece rejects the idea of negotiating an all-encompassing settlement with Turkey, clarifying that Athens only acknowledges a single dispute with Ankara: the delimitation of maritime zones.

The first thing we need to do is agree on the rules. Greece does not entertain discussions about a full-package solution since we only recognize one difference [with Turkey]. I don't expect to see any change in the next 12 months; I find it unlikely. However, dialogue is valuable. We may have disagreements, but that does not mean we should avoid talking, Mitsotakis said in an interview with Open TV on Wednesday morning.
