The Armanian Report (24 September 2024)

Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan and his wife, Anna Hakobyan, are in the United States on a working visit. During their time in New York, Pashinyan attended the 79th session of the United Nations General Assembly. Pashinyan delivered a speech at the Future Summit, sharing his vision for a better world.

In his speech, Pashinyan emphasized the importance of shaping the future, stressing how the decisions made today will impact tomorrow. Reflecting on his own experience as Armenia's Prime Minister, he noted that his party's election slogan, "There is a future," guided his leadership. He stressed that while we cannot change the past, the future is still within our control.

Pashinyan's speech was centered on the idea that building a better future requires positive thinking. He acknowledged that many global challenges, such as conflict, climate change, and human rights issues, have made it difficult for world leaders to focus on optimism. He pointed out that international platforms, like the UN, often become places where leaders air grievances and engage in blame rather than offering hopeful solutions.
