If big countries operate on a might is right basis, it will severely damage the world order and usher in the law of the jungle, with smaller and weaker countries suffering the brunt, Chinas Foreign Minister Wang Yi said on Friday (Mar 7), in a veiled reference to the United States.

Major powers should shoulder international responsibilities and fulfill their global commitments. They should not be driven solely by self-interest, nor should they bully the weak with their strength, Wang said in a press conference on the sidelines of the Two Sessions political gatherings.

He was responding to questions on Washingtons exit from international responsibilities and the opportunities it offers China, as well as the threats that the global order is facing now.
