This week, Bishkek Mayor Aibek Dzhunushaliev met with a delegation from K-water South Korean company, led by Vice President Han Seong-yong, Kabar reports.

According to the city administration, the parties discussed the implementation of joint project to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and restore the urban environment of Bishkek. The project involves fuel substitution, the installation of modern water supply systems, the use of biogas, and the implementation of gas leak prevention systems and other urban regeneration measures.

Bishkek is increasing its budget and actively developing infrastructure, but we still face many challenges that require comprehensive solutions. We hope that joint activities and the implementation of individual projects will allow us to apply Korea's successful experience to our city, said Aibek Dzhunushaliev.
