The Times of Central Asia (8 November 2025)

The United States and Central Asian nations announced a record series of trade and investment agreements at the 10th-anniversary C5+1 Summit, signaling a new phase of cooperation in energy, infrastructure, technology, and artificial intelligence.

The high-profile event at the Department of Commerce brought together ministers, ambassadors, and business leaders from across the region. Secretary of Commerce Howard Lutnick said the initiatives reflect Washington's renewed commitment to long-term regional growth and partnership.

We're advancing a clear strategy, which is reciprocal trade and strategic investment * the Department of Commerce is helping America and Central Asian firms connect, invest and grow together.
