European and Ukrainian officials have rejected Donald Trumps latest proposal for a lopsided peace deal that favors Moscow, warning that caving in to Russia will only encourage Vladimir Putin to attack NATO next.

Kaja Kallas, the European Unions top diplomat, told the U.S. presidents team that their 28-point blueprint for a ceasefire will fail without support from both Kyiv and European governments, which are now the biggest donors to Ukraines war effort.

The U.S. proposal has triggered alarm in European capitals, in part because they were completely cut out of the process of drafting it, and mostly because, in the view of one official, it amounts to nothing more than Putins wishlist.
