Kyrgyzstan on Thursday hosted a leaders summit of the Collective Security Treaty Organization (OSCE) in its capital, Bishkek.

The military alliance held narrow and expanded meetings of its Collective Security Council with the participation of almost all of its members heads of state, including Russian President Vladimir Putin, who arrived in the Kyrgyz capital on a three-day state visit on Tuesday.

Only Armenia was not represented at the summit, which announced it had suspended its participation in CSTO activities back in 2024 due to its dissatisfaction with the alliance's response to its security concerns.
