Russian President Vladimir Putin on Thursday proposed the launch of a program to equip forces of the Collective Security Treaty Organization (CSTO) with modern Russian weapons.

We propose launching a large-scale program to equip collective forces with modern Russian weapons and equipment that have proven their effectiveness in actual combat, Putin said in an address to a CSTO leaders summit in the Kyrgyz capital Bishkek, adding that they plan to organize a series of joint exercises in this spirit.

Speaking about Moscow's chairmanship in the military alliance, which will begin on Jan. 1, 2026, Putin said that Russia will continue to work closely with its allies regarding all matters related to bolstering the alliances military potential.
