In what they said was "another brick in the wall of trust," Armenia and Azerbaijan representatives revealed to Euronews in an exclusive interview in Doha how the peace process started, and a joint future both countries should now look forward to.

Armenia and Azerbaijan have reaffirmed their commitment to work together to transform the entire landscape of the South Caucasus after decades of conflict.

In what was only recently seen as an impossible peace and in a region long marred by war, the two countries found common ground not just to reach peace, but to work together for a decisive economic boost of the Eurasian space.
