Kazakhstan President Kassym-Jomart Tokaev stresses strategic importance of energy sector for Kazakhstan.

Kazakhstan should not purchase electricity from other countries given its natural resources and domestic production potential, President Kassym-Jomart Tokaev said on Wednesday, stressing the strategic importance of the energy sector for national security.

Kazakhstan has significant coal reserves, with annual production exceeding 110 million tons, and must leverage this advantage effectively, the presidential press service Akorda reported, citing Tokaev.
