The US-led United Nations Command (UNC) reaffirmed its authority over the line separating the two Koreas, pushing back against a recent internal revision by South Korea's military aimed at preventing accidental border clashes with the North, local media reported Sunday.

The UNC said it remains committed to upholding the 1953 Armistice Agreement, including the Military Demarcation Line (MDL), and to supporting measures that prevent escalation and maintain stability inside the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), according to Yonhap News, citing the UNC statement.

The command stressed that the MDL was formally established during armistice negotiations and is clearly depicted in documents of the agreement signed on July 27, 1953.
