Georgias foreign minister said new transport links between Azerbaijan and Armenia will strengthen the South Caucasus, dismissing concerns that her country could be sidelined

In an interview with the Georgian television channel, Maka Bochorishvili said ongoing discussions about building new roads between Azerbaijan and Armenia should be seen as a positive development.

We can say with confidence that this is good for the region, she said, according to APAs local bureau. New roads will only increase the regions importance in terms of connectivity.
