The US and China will hold a fresh round of high-level trade talks in Paris next week, days before US President Donald Trump is scheduled to visit Beijing.

Delegations led by US Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent and Chinese Vice Premier He Lifeng will meet in the French capital to discuss trade and investment deals, including tariffs, investment, soybeans, and rare earths, the South China Morning Post reported Wednesday.

According to the White House, Trump will travel to China from March 31 to April 2, marking his first visit to the country since returning to office in January 2025.
