Armenias Foreign Minister Ararat Mirzoyan has disclosed new details from a recent closed-door meeting with Azerbaijan, highlighting a key sticking point delaying the finalization of a peace agreement between the two sides, AzerNEWS reports via Armenpress.

Speaking at a parliamentary committee hearing, Mirzoyan said that Baku has not formally demanded constitutional changes from Armenia, but has made clear it will not sign the already initialed peace deal as long as references related to Karabakh remain in Armenias Constitution.

When we say that we cannot discuss our Constitution with you because it is Armenias internal affair * they respond: Very well * we are simply informing you that as long as your Constitution contains these provisions, we are not prepared to finally sign the peace agreement, Mirzoyan said, responding to a question from opposition MP Kristine Vardanyan.
