Kyrgyzstan's Minister of Energy, Taalaibek Ibraev, and Russias Minister of Energy, Sergei Tsivilev, have signed an agreement that is expected to elevate the countrys energy sector to a qualitatively new level, Trend reports, citing the Kyrgyz energy ministry.

The agreement opens up extensive opportunities for Kyrgyzstan, including the integration of advanced technologies, active knowledge exchange, and, most notably, the establishment of joint production facilities.

Minister Taalaibek Ibraev emphasized the agreement's significance, stating that it represents a crucial step in modernizing Kyrgyzstan's energy infrastructure, facilitating the introduction of new technologies, and bolstering domestic production capabilities.
