South Korean President Lee Jae Myung departed Sunday on a two-nation visit to India and Vietnam for summit talks that are likely to focus on stabilizing supply chains amid global energy market uncertainties stemming from the Middle East war, according to media reports.

Lee will hold talks Monday with Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi in New Delhi in the first leg of his visit, Seoul-based Yonhap News reported.

It will mark the third in-person meeting between Modi and Lee, following talks on the sidelines of the G7 and G20 summits last year.
