Mykhailo Fedorov wants billions more in military aid to continue his transformation of the Ukrainian military and continue shifting the momentum against Russia.

Ukraine believes it has wrested back the initiative on the battlefield by striking Russian troops, logistics hubs and oil infrastructure. Now it is racing to secure billions more in Western military aid before Moscow adapts.

Kyiv is asking its allies to seize what officials describe as a fleeting opportunity: fund a new wave of drones, missiles and military technology that could keep Russia off balance and deepen Ukraine's recent gains. The goal is to force Vladimir Putin to realize he can't win.
