The Australian government is seeking support from global tech giants as it works to strengthen the countrys online safety laws and artificial intelligence (AI) regulations.

Prime Minister Anthony Albanese, who met Apples executive chairman Tim Cook at the tech companys headquarters in Cupertino, California, on Saturday, said that Australia cant do it alone when it came to protecting children from the dangers of the internet.

We spoke about what were doing to protect children from online harm and the work ahead, Albanese wrote on social media.
