Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan does not rule out holding snap parliamentary elections to adopt a new Constitution if the process cannot be completed through other means.

We will publish the draft of the new Constitution in the near future, launch discussions, and submit it to parliament. We will try to persuade our opposition colleagues that this is a very important and fundamental issue, one that concerns determining and resolving the question of the continuity of the Armenian state. We will try to persuade them. If that does not work, we will pursue other scenarios, including holding snap elections. Who said that such a scenario is ruled out? Pashinyan told reporters.

The prime minister said that Armenias Constitution is not discussed with Azerbaijan.
