Kazakhstan is open to cooperation with leading universities and research centres around the world. This is what President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev said during a roundtable meeting with the heads of international organizations and leading foreign universities in Astana, Qazinform News Agency reports, citing the Akorda press service.

According to the President, the initial stage of this work had already been completed.

"The necessary infrastructure has been established, partnership agreements have been formalized, and the branches of foreign universities are expected to begin full-scale operations in the very near future. The next step is to give our cooperation meaningful substance through joint research, the development of new technologies and the implementation of practical solutions that meet the needs of our economy, the President said.
