Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan said that a new Armenian Constitution must confirm to his vision of a so-called real Armenia, which excludes Artsakh and calls for revisiting Armenias contemporary history.

Speaking at an event marking the Constitutions 30th anniversary at Yerevans Opera House on Saturday, Pashinyan further went on to say that all previous referenda for Armenias Constitution, including the first one 30 years ago that saw the participation of the majority of Armenian voters at the time, were imposed on them and did not reflect the free will of the people.

Pashinyan justified the need for a new constitution by arguing that his proposed ideology of a Real Armenia could not take shape under the current constitution.
